The Paris Moniture publishes a historical sketch of Cherbourg, of which the following is a summary:

Cherbourg, which occupies public attention at this moment, is situated in the peninuals of Cotentin, the ancient Lower Normandy, so called from Contances, its capital. The Cotentin, which formed part of the possessions of William the Conqueror, became legislas after the battle of Hastings. Gerberat, Count of Cherbourg, distinguished himself in that battle, and contributed power-mily to the success of the Normans. From the death of William in 1087, until the middle of the fitteenth century, Cherbourg was frequently taken by the French and relative to the State of the State o Cherbourg, and he took the warmest interest in the works intil the conclusion of his power.

The plan was carried out by subsequent governments. The national assembly toted funds for the continuation of the works in 1791, and again in 1792. From this period the works of the breakwater have been continued without interruption. The breadth of this stupendous work is 140 yards. The breakwater is not extended in a straight is 140 yards. The breakwater is not extended in a straight line. It is composed of two branches of unequal length, which form an angle of 170 degrees, of which the opening is turned towards the south. A commission appointed by M. Decres, Minister of Marine to Napoleon I, declared on the 20th of April, 1811, that there is anchorage in the roads of Cherbourg for 25 ships-of-the-line in summer and 17 in winter.

The inscription commemorative of the opening of the works and the inauguration of the Cherbourg basin is engraved on a plate upwards of half a ton weight, and measuring nearly seven feat in length by nearly four in breadth. The inscription is as follows:

"This basin, decreed on the 15th of April, 1803, by Napoleon, was began on the 28th of June, 1836, and was inaugurated on the 7th of August, 1858, in presence of their Majestics Emperor Napoleon III and the Empress Eugenle, his excellency Admiral Hamelin belug Minister of Marine."

agenle, his excellency Admiral Hamelin being Minister of Marine."

Amid all the tuthe lently joyous exhibitions of popular ceiling that will greet the Emperor and Empress on their way, there will not, I think, be one more calculated to del to the enthusiasm of the hour than an humble altar of turf, on which will be placed a few flowers by the ands of a poor maiden in the obscure and distant hamet of Quintin. The circumstances connected with the meetion of this little altar are few and simple, and yet well worthy of being known. "I tell the tale as it was old to me."

well worthy of being known. "I tell the tale as it was told to me."

A short time since a young peasant girl in the neighborhood of Quintin, who had just finished her education at a rural school, upon her return to her home found her family in great distress in consequence of her brother, the sole support of his parents, having been compelled to become a soldier. The young girl having heard, when at school, a great deal said of the kindness of the Empress, determined to write to her Majesty, explaining the situation in which she and her parents were left in consequence of the absence of her brother. This letter—the national state of the absence of her brother. This letter—the address "A Madame F Imperatrice, a Paris," confided to the post. The young girl said not a word of what she hald done to any one. She regarded it as a secret between herself and her Majesty; and she was not surprised (although every one clase in the village was amazed) to hear from the postman that he had a letter scaled with the imperial arms addressed to the young maiden. This letter was written by her Majesty's secretary, and assured the little peasant girl that the wrong done to her family should be speedily repaired. The letter was followed in a few days by the return of the girl's brother to his na-a few days by the return of the girl's brother to stillage.

The young soldier and his sister are about to creet an altar of turf, and to decorate it with flowers, and at that altar both, accompanied by the maidens and young men of their village, will offer up their prayers for the health, long life and happiness of the Empress as she passes on her way from St. Brienne to Dinan.

The only places in Brittany in which the English are collected in considerable numbers are Dinan and Saint Malo, with its great suburb Saint Servan. The vice consul of England at Saint Malo has summoned a meeting to be held this day, at which will be prepared an address to the Emperor upon his arrival at Saint Malo.

FINAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE FETES.

[From the Liverpool Tones, July 31.]

Final arrangements have been made for the imperial visit to Cherbourg.

Queen Victoria will arrive there on the 4th of August, and the Emperor and Empress will make their entrance into the town on the same evening. The first interview between the sovereigns will take place on the 5th, and their Majesties will pass the 6th in the readstead. On the 7th the inauguration, henediction, and immersion of the dock Napoleon III will take place, and the screwliner Ville de Nantes, which has been built on one of its slips, will be launched. The Emperor will give a splendid dinner to the persons attached to his suite on board the Bretagne, screw line-of-battle ship, which will be the French flag-ship.

The equestrian statue of Napoleon I will also be inaugurated at these files. The height of the whole mass, from the metal stand on which the legs of the horse rest to the top of the Emperor's hat, is 164 feet, and its weight six tons.

The Marechal Duc de Malakoff will accompany her Majesty in her visit. His excellency will be on board the flag ship, the Royal Albert, in compliance with an invitation from his old companion-in-arms, Admiral Lord

poblished in the Utke Observer, relates the following anecdote:

From Paris we went to Aix la Chapelle, and then to Cologue and Bonn. From Bonn, a half hour's ride by stilroad enabled us to widt Bruhl, a Prussian palace, the grounds about which are very handsome, although the palace itself is, when compared with the English and French, rather plain. The attendant who showed us the palace pointed out to us a large double bed, wide onough for three or four, which had been made for Victoria and Princa A'bert, on the occasion of the Queen's visit, some ten years ago, to Prussia. The Prussian style is single beds, two in the same room, but Victoria would not submit to be unconsorted, and demanded her accustomed accommodations. Another double bed is now a shown at Bruhl, which the Prince of Prussia, who has just married Victoria's daughter, ordered for their accommodation at Cologue—which is an hour or two by railroad from Bruhl—but which proved to be too short for his princely accommodation, so that an express train had to be despatched to Bruhl, to bring them the Victoria couch.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

Verthation.—It is well known that life cannot be supported without pure air; but few take much pains to see that the apartments where they reside are properly ventilated, with a view to health. It must be evident, from the slightest consideration, that those rooms in which most of our hours are spent ought to be the best provided with means of ventilation; and more care should be bestowed upon our sleeping apartments than is usually done, with this view. Every adult person constants four cubic feet of air per minute—that is, he also sorts the exygen from it, and renders it unfit for breathing. Suppose a single person occupies an unventilated bed-room for eight hours, the amount of air vitiated will be more than nineteen hundred cubic feet; and if the room be sixteen feet square, and seven and a half feet.

Yestriations, quite brick. Although the reaches though to it and to admin a supply of the various properly the few take much pains to escape from the crowd, and generally submitted without much grumbling.

Suppose a walk through the market of the strate of the be more than nineteen hundred cubic feet; and if the room he sixteen feet square, and seven and a half foot high, every cubic foot of air in the room would have passed through the lungs by that time. It will thus be seen that where two or more persons occupy a room, unless there are means of ventilation, the health must inevitably suffer. A bed-room ought to be the largest room in the house, with a high ceiling; but since many of our houses are not so constructed, all that can be done is to see that they are ventilated in the best manner their construction will permit. As a general thing. ner their construction will permit. As a general thing the cold air is near the floor and the hot air above; an the cold air is near the floor and the hot air above; and the most impure air also rises near the celling, being lighter after it has been deprived of the oxygen, which is its life-giving element. Hence, as is well remarked by an exchange, a low bedstead is preferable to a high one; care being taken, however, not to have it so low as to be swept by currents. Beds on the floor are injurious, for example, because the draught from under the door often goes over them. Wherever there is an open fireplace, there is a continual suction of air towards it from the doors and windows, and in such apartments a bed should never be made upon the floor. Currents of air are indispensable, made upon the floor. Currents of air are indispensable, nevertheless, if a room is to be kept healthy. But it is chamber is higher than that out of doors, no exchange of air is produced, and the effect is the same if we open a window at top, when the air without is hotter than the a window at top, when the air without is hotter than the air within. To ventilate a room, under such conditions, we must reverse this process. The popular notion, which is an erroneous one, is that it is only necessary to raise a window to produce ventilation, no matter what the con-ditions may be. Holding a candle in the aperture will show when a current is established and when not.

The best method of ventilating a room in summer is to have door-frames and window-frames fitted to their various openings, and covered with wire-cloth, mosquite netting, millinet, or other loose fabric, through which air will pass freely, but in a diffused manner. Where economy has to be consulted, the free opening of win-dows and doors will generally answer; but it is best to open all, rather than only one, if this is likely to create a draught over the bed. Where a current of air cannot be avoided, or where such a current is desired for its cooling effects, it should be made to flow equally over the whole person, as this destroys the liability to take

It is always best to open a window at both top and bottom. In this case, if the air without is hotter than within, the current enters at the top and passes out at the bottom; but, if the air within is hottest, the current is reversed. Often, on going to bed, at this season, the has reversed. Often, on going to been, at this season, the last is the case; but, before morning, the chamber becomes cooler shan out of doors, so that the sleeper is waked up by a draught across his person, which did not exist when he retired. A careful attention to these facts, and an adaptation of them to varying circumstances will do much to prevent disease.

HACKMEN. - Why don't the backmen in this city form protective association ! The experiment has been tried other cities, and has been found productive of the most beneficial results. In consequence of the extertionate charges of hackmen, and in many cases their attempts at charges of nacemen, and P many cases their accempes at imposition, even after a bargain is usede—under the im-pression that a traveller would prefer to be fleeced rather than to forego his journey in the effort to secure justice— the public have been led to look with distrust upon a class who fulfil a very important and necessary service in the body politic. For this reason, the experienced traveller always avoids the hacks as much as possible, and in the large cities where there are lines of omnibuses, he pays six cents for his ride, and gets his baggage taken to its destination by an expressman. The loss of custom in this way leads the hackmen to endeavor to make up in cheating what they lose in business; and thus things go on from had to worse. Now the remedy for these evils is a simple one. In the city of New York, the hackmen have formed an association, and wear badges to show that they are responsible men, and can be found after a job is over; and by discountenancing all those who prac-tice impositions on travellers, they will be able to build up their drooping business, and once more command the onfidence and respect of the community. There is no good reason that we can perceive why the hackmen in Washington should not adopt a similar course; but on the contrary there are many reasons to induce them to do so. The following remarks from the New York Ex press are, in general, equally applicable to the latitude of Washington:

press are, in general, equally applicable to the latitude of Washington:

"A city like this needs hackmen, coaches, cabs, &c., and all would be plentifully used if kept nice and clean, and if the prices were no higher than in other cities here or in Europe. London cab prices, which are rather high, would command plenty of custom in New York, if the citizen were sure of the price beforehand, and certain no quarrel would happen after the ride. In London not only is the price named, but the distances are printed or posted in all quarters of the city, and by the city corporation, with the sares annexed; so that the citizen knows beforehand just the price of a ride, and just the distance he is to go. The corporation of our city now, and the abundance of omnibuses and city railroads, are here, it is true, rather against the hackmen; but, if order existed at the ferries and the depots, and the exact price of a job was known—and this no more than in London, where horse flesh and horse feed are as dear as they are here—good coaches and good cabs would soon flud employ enough, while citizens would use them alone, or in parties, for their ordinary rides about town.

"If the hackmen can organize among themselves so as to preserve order, secure responsibility, and make certain what is now very uncertain, they will soon recover their old respectability and confidence. At present we all view the quartette of them at the furties and the depots as if we were forlorn hopes, storming a Schastopol. We dare not look up, or around, or say 'aye,' or 'no,' when they speak to us, and we reverently thank our lucky stars when we have safely threaded their whip, and whip-handles, and screams. We need, then, their help and their horses, if they will only secure us the way safely to get at them without a fight."

CIRCULAR TO OUR MARYLAND AND VIR-

The Entire Product of Two Factories.

The Entire Product of Two Fuctories.

WE HAVE the entire product of two Virginia factories that are sent to this region of country. They make exclusively to our order, and with an eye expressity to the wants of our customers, the mest superior Grey and Drab Fulled Cloths, Country Flannels, wide plaid, and the "Country stringht striped Linseys," that are produced in the United States.

The "mick" of their whole product is sont to us; the inferior and rejected lots are sent to the northern commission morehants.

The goods we offer are regarded by competent judges who have purchased of us for years past as vastly superior to anything produced in this part of the world.

The factories are located is Weatorn Virginia, where wool and labor are cheap, and are liberally employed in their protuction.

The immense lots of all superior fabrics for servants' wear that snumly pass through our hands enables us to offer really the most superior goods produced at about the same prices usually charged for the inferior grades.

Farmers and planters who clothe their servants well will find our stock of goods adapted for the purpose much the largest in the District.

In addition, our stock will be found most ample and complete in all departments of all first-class European and American Fancy and Stapio Dry Goods.

The heavy Woollens for servants will be in store by the 16th of Au-departments of all first-class European and American Fancy and Staple Dry Goods.

The heavy Woodlens for servants will be in store by the 16th of August, 1888, and we most candidly suggest that it will be best for our customers to make their selections early, as it is of frequent occurrence that our supply is not more than half equal to the domaind.

One price only, marked in plain figures, and no salesman in the house permitted to sake or take a farthing over or under the marked price, hence no parchaser is deceived.

We are not opening any new accounts.

All old bills presented monthly for payment in each; consequently we are enabled thereby to continue our low scale of cash prices. Strangers and all others most containly solicited to examine our stock, if our for their own gratification. They will at least learn the lowest each price.

stock, if but for their own gratification. They will at least learn the lowest cash price.

A visit to our establishment incurs no obligation to purchase. Our northern and eastern correspondents and us new supplies daily. We are therefore presenting at all times the targest and most comprehensive stock of first class staples, with all attractive novelties that bear the impross of substantial merit.

Good articles, low prices, and fair decaling may be relied or; in all reases.

"Central Stores," west building, opposite Centre Market.

P. S.—Permit us, if you please, most respectfully to invite your attention to our circular above; also to name in this connection that we are the largest operators in all kinds of Blankets in our market, especially White and Grey Blankets of superior quality and at low prices for servants.

A LL SPRING AND SUMMER GOODS, WITH our entire stock of fancy-colored silks and ladies robes in all fabrics, now offered at recently and largely-reduced prices.

Our stock of all kinds of dry goods for general family wants remains theroughly assorted throughout the entire year.

Our northern and eastern correspondents send us new supplies daily in all first-class dry goods.

One price only, marked in plain figures; hence no purchaser is deceived.

Our entire stock is marked in plain figures at the lowest cash market prices; hence oustomers who have had bills with us for years past are assured that they will not be permitted, as in times past, to make payments its small instalment, nor by notes or verbal promises to call in a few days; when we present a bill we want the amount in cash.
